The Rev. Mr. THOMAS RANDAL, A.B. deceased, late Vicar of Ellingham, in the County of Northumberland, and

The most valuable materials which were deposited therein, were carefully examined by George Allan, Esq; F.R.S. at Durham, in the county of Durham; particularly the Manuscripts of the late Roger Gale, Esq; and the Rev. Mr. Randal.

I am indebted to Matthew Tustal of Wycliffe, in the county of York Esq; for the foundation Charter of Malross Abbey, engraved and given to be bound up with the last volume.

I have stated to the reader, the important Trade of this county, from which communicated by J. S. Bell, Esq; Surveyor of the Customs at Newcastle, whose accuracy may be depended on.

To the correspondence of the Rev. Mr. Lambe of Northampton, Ralph Spearman, Esq; of Easingwold, and several other Gentlemen, I owe much information.

I beg leave to express my duty and due acknowledgments to the following Persons, for their voluntary Subscriptions and Support of this Work.

TO
Sir JOHN HUSSEY DELAVAL
of SEATON DELAVAL,

In the County of NORTHUMBERLAND, Baronet.

SIR,

It is with great diffidence I make this Address to You, whose distinguished taste in the Belles-Lettres, & excellent discernment in works of Genius & the Fine Arts are so publicly confessed.

I am conscious this Work has no other merit to claim your countenance or protection, than its Locality, and being derived from Avocations which the beauties and remains of Antiquity in Northumberland have occasioned; a County where you enjoy so eminent a station: yet through the Liberality incident to an enlarged mind, I flatter myself I shall obtain your Patronage of these Volumes.

An unbecoming arrogance would mark any attempt I should be able to make to address you with Panegyrick on the Illustrious race from which you are descended or the exalted virtues you possess: It is alone my province to acknowledge with the greatest Deference and Respect, that I am,

SIR,

Your much honoured, and most Obedient Servant.

This was formerly a chapel to St Andrew's, Bywell, its mother church, and was annexed by the foundation charter to Blanchland Abbey, situate in the same chapelry. The chapel contained in length about sixteen yards, and four or five in breadth within the walls, the chancel being one foot or more narrower than the body of the chapel. The increase of the parishoners in number, and the crowds of people coming from the adjoining parishes, frequently made the presence of so many devout strangers troublesome to the congregation: hereupon Humph. Hopper, a freeholder, and constant inhabitant within the said chapelry, prevailed with Dr Tho. Eden, one of Bishop Crewe's Trustees, to give him 20l. to be employed in defraying the charges of an enlargement of the said chapel, when a considerable enlargement was made under the care and inspection of Mr Hopper.

(d) Patr. Cockburn Ob. 4 Jan. 1748, Æ. 71, his wife Ob. 21st May, 1749, Æ. 71, they were buried at Long Horfley. He was the son of John Cockburn, D. D. Rector of Northaw in Middlesex, married the learned Catharine Trotter 1708, and had the donative of Nayland in Suffolk conferred on him the same year, where he settled, but returned to London to be Curate at St Dunstan's in Fleet-street, where he continued till the accession of King Geo. I. when scrupling the oaths of abjuration he was obliged to quit the Curacy. After this he instructed 16 or 17 years the youth in Chancery Lane in the Latin tongue. In 1726, consulting Lord Chancellor, King, and his own father about the intent of that oath, and reading some papers relating to it, he was reconciled. Being invited, 1727, to be minister to the Epal congregation at Aberdeen in Scotland, he qualified himself by law; and on the day of King George the Second's accession preached a sermon on the duty and benefit of praying for the government. Soon after the Chancellor presented him to Long Horfley Vic. Through the ill behaviour of his Curates he was called to residence by Bishop Chandler 1737, and obliged to leave Aberdeen. He was a man of great learning, and besides his sermon preached upon 1 Tim. xi. 1. 4. printed at Edinburgh 1728, and his vindication of it, he published in the weekly miscellany a Defence of Prime Ministers in the character of Joseph, and a Treatise on the Mosaick Deluge.

The church stands on the south side of the bridge, half a mile from the town: it has three good aisles, a gallery at the west end, and another between the pillars of the north aisle, a vestry, and one bell. Anth. de Beck, Bishop of Durham, appropriated this church to the Chaplains officiating at his new built chapel of Auckland, but after his death Ralph son of William de Graystock recovered by law the patronage thereof. The Rectory-house was rebuilt in the year 1768, by Oliver Naylor then Rector.

MAILROSS CHARTER.

THE foundation charter of Mailross Abbey, by David King of Scotland, having been communicated to me since the publication of this volume of my View of Northumberland, by Marmaduke Tunstall, Esq; of Wycliffe, in the county of York, the acquisition to the work was esteemed so valuable, that I obtained an accurate engraving to be made, by the ingenious artist Mr Stephens; and which I present to the public herewith. The specimen engraved beneath the other, is intended to shew the character in which the confirmatory charter of Prince Henry is wrote: and which latter instrument is in the following form.

I beg leave to add the following remarkable circumstances, to the incidents before mentioned relative to Mailrofs.

Adam Abbot of Mailrofs, and Gillibert a Monk of that convent, the Bishop of Gallway, in the year 1235, were with the army of Patric Earl of March, when the Gallwegians were subdued. They were in arms to support Gilrodli, the bastard son of Allan, in his claim of Lord of that territory, in opposition to the right of three legitimate daughters.

A. D. 1237, Otho the Pope's Legate took up his residence at this place, when he heard the case of Herbert Abbot of Kelso, and obliged him to reassume that office, which he had resigned some time before.

Reginald of Roxburgh, a Monk of this house, was a man of the highest reputation for wisdom and eloquence. He was Envoy to the Court of Norway, when the cession of the Western Isles was obtained to the Crown of Scotland, A. D. 1264.

In the year 1303, King Edward was attended in his Scotch expedition by Hugh Audely, who with 60 men at arms took up his quarters at this abbey. John Comyn, the Guardian of Scotland, made an attack upon him in the night, forced the gates of the abbey, and killed several of the guard. Sir Thomas Grey fled over the bridge, and defended himself in a cottage till he saw it in flames over his head, when he surrendered himself prisoner. Lel. Col. v. II. p. 541.

In

In 1346, King Edward III. kept his Christmas at Mailross, having entered into a truce with the adherents of David Bruce.

In 1424, King James I. of Scotland, at this place ratified the truce concluded in England on his deliverance.

In the Earl of Hertford's expedition in the month of Sept. 1545, he had with him an army of 12,000 men, and marked his progress with most horrid devastation and ruin: he destroyed the abbies of Jedburgh, Dryburgh, and Kelso. The troops under Sir George Bowes and Sir Bryan Layton the preceding year had plundered the monastery of Mailross, and burnt and sacked the town; but they spared the sacred edifice: that crime was left for the eternal infamy of a Hertford. Neither religion or the love of the fine arts could stay his sacrilegious hand from the destruction of this elegant fabric: nay his wantonness was such, that the Scotch writers accuse him of that puerile inveteracy against the Earl of Angus, as to command his soldiers to deface and destroy the monuments of his ancestors.

ADDITIONAL OBSERVATIONS on the Subject of YEVERING BELL.

Pen-Maen-Mawr, in Caernarvonshire, having lately been visited by that ingenious inquirer into subjects of antiquity, Governor Pownall, and he having addressed two treatises on the subject to the Antiquarian Society, I shall, by way of addition to my quotations in support of my conjectures on the nature of the works upon the crown of Yeving Bell, p. 246, make some extracts from the curious remarks published in the third volume of the Archæologia on this Welsh monument; and as Mr Pownall refers to the account given by Bishop Gibson in his edition of Camden, I will first transcribe that account.

" On the top of Pen-Maen stands a lofty and impregnable hill, called " Braich-y Dhinas; wherein we find the ruinous walls of an exceed" ing strong fortification, encompassed with a treble wall, and within " each wall the foundation of at least a hundred towers, all round and
 " of equal bigness, and about six yards diameter within the walls. The " walls of this Dhinas were in most places two yards thick, and in some
 " about three. This castle seems, while it stood, impregnable, there " being no way to offer any assault to it; the hill being so very high,
 " steep, and rocky, and the walls of such strength. The way or en-
 " entrance

"trance into it, ascends with many turnings; so that 100 men might
"defend themselves against a whole legion; and yet it should seem that "there were lodgings within these walls for 20,000 men. At the sum"mit of this rock, within the innermost wall, there is a well which "affords plenty of water, even in the driest summers. By the tradition
"we receive from our ancestors, this was the strongest and safest re"fuge or place of defence that the ancient Britons had in all Snowdon,
"to secure them from the incursions of their enemies. Moreover the "greatness of the work shews, that it was a princely fortification,
"strengthened by nature and workmanship; seated on the top of
"one of the highest mountains of that part of Snowdon which lies
"towards the sea."

Mr Pownall says, "Dr. Gibson says indeed he had taken no descrip"tion of this himself, but gives the account as he receives it from a
"MS written in King Charles the First's time, by Sir John Wyn, of "Gwydir.

"This account is copied into all the descriptions of Great Britain,
"and is going down to posterity under every form of authenticity.

"A guide was necessary to conduct me up the pathless mountain."
After passing the inclosures, "our way became a mixture of walking
"and climbing, as some degree of practicability did here and there "offer access amid the rocks and multitude of stones. After we had "gotten to the height of the precipice, very properly called Pen-Maen-
"Mawr, or the great stone head, or head of the great rock, we found "ourselves at this first stage, in a sort of valley which appeared to be "a wilderness of stones. We then ascended a second hill, and then "over a multitude of stones like ruins, (here I suppose the outer wall
"to be) a third, at the summit of which the mountain comes as it "were to a point. The mountain on the top of Pen-Maen-Mawr is "called Brè-y-Dhinas, which may be translated the hill of the city,
"or Braich-y-Dhinas, the arm of the city. The summit of the third
"mountain my guide called Pen-y-Dhinas, or the head of the city. On "this summit is the curious place I sought to view. I paced its diame"ters as well as I could over the heaps of ruins. I examined the in"closing walls where they yet remained perfect. The space inclosed is "of an oval form, about 30 or 40 yards long, and not quite 20 wide.
"I speak this guessing at the section from the manner in which I could "pace “pace it. The inclosure consists of two concentral walls, clearly to be “marked and traced; there seems to be the vestiges of a third wall at “the foot of this summit; but scarce to be discerned from the ruins “that had fallen and borne it down. This I did not trace. The walls “were seven or eight feet thick, and about five feet high: the distance “from the innermost to the next is about 20 feet. The distance to the “trace where the ruins of the third may be supposed to be, may be “twice as many yards. The walls are constructed of loose unhewn “stones, piled without any cement or mortar, like what the country “people call a dry wall. The ruinous state in which they are, and the “heaps of ruins with which they have loaded the ground, where they “have tumbled down, render it impossible to say what may have been “in the invirons of them; but I saw neither towers nor ruins of towers, “nor even the vestiges of such rains.*

“The space inclosed contains a barrow of that kind which Dr.
 “Stukely calls a long barrow, and ascribes to the sepulture of an Arch-“Druid. This structure is formed intirely of small loose stones, bear“ing north and south, and almost fills the whole space of the interior “inclosure. On the east side, in a line with the middle of the cairn, “there is a clear perpetual spring arising from a well.

“This inclosure was open at the north point, as for the entrance.
 “The way up to this entrance must have been by a winding course, “along the west side of the mountain, from south to north, until it “arrived at the extreme north summit, and it then turned to the “south, so as to enter at this north entrance.

“I discovered among the ruins on the western side of this mountain, “near the outermost wall, a rock basin, on the right hand of the path, “as it approaches to the building. This seemed to be supplied with “a constant living stream, which flowed over its edges. Its end only “appeared, the rest was covered with the ruins which had tumbled “over it; and the ruins lay in such broken masses about the place “where it stood, that I could not get nearer than 20 or 30 yards of “it; so that I can speak only by guess either of its form or dimensions; “yet

* Since I wrote the above, both Mr Banks and Mr Pennant assure me there are circular enclosures within the body or solid of this third wall, which are so far forth a great weakening to it, if it was ever meant for defence.

“ yet as I took a view of it in two or three different positions, I will “ endeavour to give an idea of it, as it appeared to me. It has the “ form of a shallow square trough, having its cavity about six inches, “ or it may be a foot deep, and about three feet wide. It seems to “ have been split into the form under which it now lies; but to have “ received no further operation, nor to have been touched with any “ tool.

“ Thus far as to facts: I will next venture to give my opinion. And “ first as to what it is not. From the nature and extent of the ground “ inclosed; from the nature of the walls inclosing it; from what one “ sees actually existing within this inclosure, it is evident beyond the “ possibility of doubt, that this never was intended for, or could be “ used as, a fortification, much less as a fortress. The inward inclo“ sure contains a cairn, as above described; and there is, in the space “ inclosed, but just room for this cairn, with the wall on the side of “ it. In the space between the two innermost walls, there is not room “ for any lodgement. What kind of structures may have been between “ these two apparent walls and the supposed third wall, is not now “ easily to be discovered. The first stands on the pitch of the summit, “ and the latter at the foot of a steep sloping descent. As the distance “ from the two interior concentric walls to this supposed one, cannot “ be 40 yards, neither the nature of the site nor the space is calculated “ for such habitations and lodgements as those who imagine this to “ have been a fortification must suppose: but in the next place, if any “ habitations had been there erected, these walls could never have been “ either a cover or defence to them; add to this, that the walls them“ selves are not of the kind which could form a cover, and give at the “ same time the advantage of fighting from behind them. This place “ therefore never was a fortified habitation.*

“ It

* The walls are too thick, and the works too large, to have been erected by a few shepherd inhabitants, as some people imagine them to have been, intended as a stronghold, to secure their cattle from the foraging parties of an enemy passing through the country. On the other hand, these works are not of such strength, as to resist an attack, even in the rudest times of barbarity. However, nothing but an attention to some one of the greatest duties of society, could have induced so large a number of people, as must have been employed in getting together, and piling up such a quantity of stones, as are still remaining thus piled up. If the building produced is not sufficient for defence, religion immediately recurs to the mind, used to see the immense structures which she has reared, in almost every part of the world.

Mr Banks.

" It appears to have been one of the Druids consecrated high places " of worship. These places were always inclosed and separated off " from common use and profanation. The line of separation was either
 " a simple ditch, like that at Stonehenge, or a ditch and mound of " earth sloping inwards, like that at Abury, or a line of erect stones,
 " forming a kind of wall like that at Carnbrè in Cornwall, or a wall
 " like that at this place. This line in none of the above instances was " formed for defence, but merely to mark the bounds. As in the " Druid high place at Carnbrè, one sees, within the sacred bounds,
 " cairns, cromleches, and multitudes of circular holy compartments ;
 " so here I must suppose the hundreds of circular foundations spoken
 " of were the remains of like holy consecrated recesses, dedicated to the " service of religious ceremonies and worship. The situation of this " holy temple on the high place, the nature of the inclosures, the in" terior and more sacred inclosures, the parts contained in them, the " cairn, the sacred well and basons, all mark it to be precisely one of " these Druid temples. As Mr Pennant, who has gone twice over it,
 " intends to have an actual survey made of it, as well as of some other " places of a like nature, in these parts, the public may expect a more
 " particular account than the above affords."

I should have been happy, had Mr Pennant's publication been in time, to have added his remarks. Yevinger Bell has been little visited, and the work is infinitely greater than the above which has exercised the Governor's pen.

In another letter dated the 10th Nov. 1774, published in the same volume of the Archaeologia, the Governor addressing himself to one Gough, says, Mr Pennant had caused an accurate draught to be taken of its parts, and he annexes an etching made thereof. To his former arguments he adds, " If we may compare the profane rites of idolatry
 " to the sacred ones of the pure worship of the Spirit in Truth, we shall " find in the outward and visible forms enough to mark, that, although " they were corrupt and become abominable, yet they were originally " derived from the true and sacred source.

" We read of the Mount of God, even prior to the Mosaic institution
 " (Exodus xviii. 5.) and, previous to the commencement of this insti" tution,

* See Dr. Borlase's description and very elegant views of it.

"tution, on the spot where the Lord came down upon Mount Sinai,
 "to deliver the law to his people, the consecration of the holy place,
 "was by the same forms as this appears to lie under. First, the mount
 "itself was separated by one general line of consecration enclosing the "whole. Next, the mount is divided into an outward and holy, an "inward and more sacred holy of holies, the place of the presence or "symbol. The people at large were prohibited under the highest de"nunciation of divine vengeance, and by the severest capital penalties
 "from intruding upon the holy mount. The Priests were indeed per"mitted to come near, and to enter into the first orb, within the first
 "enclosure; but the high Priest alone could approach and enter into
 "the place of the presence. Exodus xix. 12. "And thou shalt set bounds
 "unto the people round about, saying, Take heed to yourselves, that ye go
 "not up into the mount, or touch the border of it: whosoever toucheth the "mount shall be surely put to death." Ver. 20. "And the Lord called Moses
 "up to the top of the mount: and the Lord said unto Moses, Go down and
 "charge the people, lest they break through unto the Lord, to gaze, and
 "many perish." Ver. 22. "And let the Priests also, which come near to the "Lord, sanctify themselves, lest the Lord break forth upon them." Ver. 24.
 "Then shalt thou come up, thou, and Aaron with thee; but let not the Priests
 "and people break through."

"With these Ideas, let us view the plan of this consecrated mount.
 "Here is first, an outward line of holy separation, by which the whole
 "mount is consecrated. There is next a double and more sacred sepa-
 "ration, by which the top of the mount, the Bry-e-Tynas, the mount
 "of the holy fire, or the representative presence, is made secret and sa"cred: in this the Arch-Druid or high Priests alone could enter. The "space between the outward and inward, or more sacred line of sepa"ration, was the Pronaos in which all the secondary rites of religion,
 "and all those duties wherein religion mixed with the civil were per"formed: such as the ordinary sacrifices, the consecration of the chil"dren, the judgments, the teachings and divining, and lastly the bu"rials. Hence it is, that in this space were found cromleches cirt"vaens, judgment seats, holy basins, rocking-stones, and these circular "chapels. I do not mean to be understood, as supposing that all these "several particulars are to be found within this space, on this holy "mount, now the subject of my inquiry; but in this, and in that of "Carnbrè, I may venture to say all may be enumerated. I need not
 "rummage over quotations to prove, that on these cairns was lighted
 "up

“ up the sacred fire of Bel or Baal, and that they were actually the “ the presence place of the fire of Baal. I could, after viewing this place, “ and reading the 19th chapter of Exodus, describing the most sacred “ ceremony of the true religion, raise up to myself some lively images “ of the imitative, but false and superstitious ceremonies of the beggarly “ elements of the fire worship.

“ Upon the whole, these curious remains of antiquity are not only “ an existing exemplar of those temples dedicated to the ancient fire “ worship, which with such uncommon learning Mr Bryant has first “ explained to the world; but the parts point out the real existence,
 “ and explain the nature of many of the ceremonies of the old religion,
 “ of which we knew, or perhaps yet know so little.”

These remarks of Mr Pownall's, are many of them very curious; they are most of them well adapted to the subject I visited on Yevinger Bell: he makes some positive positions touching the druidical modes, not well supported; and if we refer to Hebrew customs, as the light by which we should trace those of our British Priests, we will find many of those positions contradicted: but I did not make these extracts with a view of any criticism, but merely as applicable matter to my own subject.

up the sacred fire of God or Man, and that they were actually the the greatest part of the fire of God. I could not, however, find and reading the 10th chapter of Genesis, describing the well known sacrifice of the first-born, and up to my knowledge, the of the narrative, but this and subsequent comments of the contents of the first worship.

I own the whole, those various remains of antiquity are not only an amazing example of those things which are to be seen in worship, which with such wisdom leading the way to the explained to the world; but the great point of the text is
and explain the nature of many of the ceremonies of the old religion, of which we have, or perhaps yet know so little.

These remains of the former, are many in them very curious; they are most of them well adapted to the subject I treat on, leaving little to the reader to guess at, and the historical notes, not well supported; and if we turn to Hebrew culture, as the light by which we should view those of our British people, we will find many of that nation's customs, but I did not make such remarks with a view of any criticism, but merely to assist the reader to my own subject.
